

for consideration of a method for regulatory acceptance. The peer review panel was charged with developing a scientific consensus on the usefulness and limitations of the test method. The peer review panel concluded that the LLNA is a valid alternative to currently accepted guinea pig test methods for the assessment of allergic contact dermatitis when the test method is conducted in accordance with peer review panel recommendations. The panel also concluded that the LLNA offers animal welfare advantages compared to conventional guinea pig methods in that it involves less pain and distress, and fewer animals may be required. The peer review panel's report has been forwarded to Federal agencies for their determination of the regulatory acceptability and applicability of the test method according to their statutory mandates.

Summary of the Report

The report contains 212 pages and includes the results of the independent peer review evaluation and supporting documentation, including the original test method submission, supporting data evaluations conducted by NICEATM, and a proposed protocol that incorporates the recommendations of the peer review panel.
